EDITORIAL

“MULTIFOCUS ISSUE OF JCPR”

Dear friends,

The Journal of Camel Practice and Research (JCPR) has entered into 11th year with a new multifocus issue which covers immunology, pathology, infectious disease, anatomy, production and physiology. Main highlights of this issue include use of an automatic bucket milking machine for increasing milk performance, serum calcitonin levels in dromedaries, immune response against MUC1-peptide produced heavy chain antibodies, immunoradiometric assay of serum IgE levels, antioxidant status, review on epidemiology and diagnosis of surra, architecture of subpleural microvessel of the lung of bactrian camel, electronmicroscopic study on peculiarities of stomach of one humped camel, cross experimental infection with two virulent orf viruses, efficacy of antibiotics against S. aureus and other bacterial microflora of skin wounds and abscesses, case reports of tuberculosis and rectal fibroma, biochemical profile of male and female camels and Vitamin A, C, E status in dromedaries.

JCPR has amassed great wealth of camelid literature in it over a period of one decade. Special issues on physiology, anatomy, haematology, laboratory diagnosis and new world camelids are few examples of it. JCPR has also brought out proceedings of two camel conferences held in Hannover (1994) and Israel (1996). The latest gift of JCPR to the scientific community is release of a compilation of 111 manuscripts related to the camelid physiology and nutrition in the form of a new book “SELECTED RESEARCH ON CAMELID PHYSIOLOGY AND NUTRITION”, ISBN : 81-901141-2-3.

This book will help researchers to look into these papers more conveniently as these are presented in a classified manner. Authors will find their recognition because now their manuscript is bound in a book form and shall remain in the shelf of libraries forever. Moreover, the important outcome of the book would decide the direction of future research in the field of camelid physiology and nutrition.

With best wishes.
